PRÉCISIONS SUR L'INTERVALLE DE CONFIANCE

L'intervalle de confiance (appelé aussi marge d'erreur) est l'intervalle dans lequel se trouve la valeur recherchée avec une probabilité fixée (le niveau de confiance). L'amplitude de cet intervalle dépend du niveau de confiance, de la valeur observée et de la taille de l'échantillon. Le calcul n'est justifié que pour les sondages aléatoires. Il ne peut pas être déterminé dans le cas de sondages par quotas mais on considère qu'il est proche de celui des sondages aléatoires.

Note de lecture : pour un échantillon de 902 personnes (Base intentions de vote européennes), si le score mesuré est de 20%, il y a 95% de chances pour que la valeur réelle se situe aujourd'hui entre 19% et 21% (plus ou moins 2,6 points).

A European election survey three months ahead of the June 2024 European elections

euronews. Ipsos

CONTENTS

KEY FINDINGS

#1 A rise, but no wave

The radical right would make significant progress, gaining more than one-fifth of MEPs for the first time - but the extent of its increase would vary greatly from country to country.

2 Still the European "grand coalition"?

Only a coalition between the conservatives, social democrats and liberals could have a stable majority – although alternative ad hoc majorities could be found on some legislation.

A well-liked EU, a little-known Commission?

While almost two-thirds of Europeans believe their country benefits from being in the European Union, only 37% have a good opinion of the European Commission's actions.

A mixed performance

While citizens tend to approve of the UE's record in the fight against Covid, they are more split on its action on Ukrainian and environmental issues, and dissatisfied on immigration.

However, this projection is subject to a number of unknown factors, including the attitude of MEPs from the Non-Inscrits group, and changes in groups after the elections.

Rising prices remain a priority for Europeans

A majority of Europeans believe that social issues (combating rising prices, reducing social inequalities) should be Europe's priority, ahead of immigration and the environment.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE COMPOSITION OF THE EU PARLIAMENT SINCE 2019

Non-inscrits (non-attached members)

Renew Europe

The composition of the European Parliament has significantly changed between the June 2019 election and today. The number of MEPs has decreased overall: the Brexit in June 2020 reduced the number of seats from 751 to 705, and the reapportionment in June 2023 means that we will elect 720 MEPs in June.

Two groups also lost a significant number of MEPs in 5 years:

- the radical right ID group, notably due to the transfer of some Lega and RN MEPs to Fratelli d'Italia and Reconquête respectively as well as the change of group for the Finns Party, who joined the ECR group;
- and the S&D group, mainly as a result of the withdrawal of the British Labour MEPs and the suspension of the Slovak SMER.

THE PROJECTED COMPOSITION OF THE NEXT EU PARLIAMENT

Our projection shows that the ID group is likely to be significantly strengthened after next June's elections: it would obtain 81 MEPs, virtually tied for third place with the Renew group (85 MEPs, down significantly) and the ECR group (76 MEPs, up slightly). Alongside the Renew group, the other group that would see its number of MPs significantly reduced is the Greens/EFA group (55 MEPs). The other groups would be maintaining their positions (EPP, S&D) or rising very slightly (The Left).

Generally speaking, while our projection does point to a clear increase in the number of MEPs for the two radical right-wing groups (ECR and ID) in the European Parliament, there is no wave in their favor.

Christian Democrats &

Conservatives European People's Party (since 1979)

Eurosceptic Conservatives

European Progressive Democrats (1979-1984), European Democratic Alliance (1984-1999), Europe of Nations (1994-1999), Europe of Democracies & Diversities (1999-2004), Union for Europe of the Nations (1999-2009), Independence / Democracy (2004-2009), Europe of Freedom & Democracy (2009-2019), European Conservatives & Reformists (since 2019)

European Right (1984-1994), Europe of Nations & Freedom (2015-2019),

Non-Inscrits (non-attached members)

The radical right's progression at European level is clear in the long term. While MEPs from right-wing eurosceptic and far-right groups accounted for just 8.7% of all MEPs 20 years ago, this figure rose steadily after the 2009 (11.8%), 2014 (15.7%) and 2019 (18%) elections. Our projection shows that this year, for the first time, they could represent more than a fifth (21.8%) of the members of the European Parliament.

The two major losers of are the EPP (Christian democrats and Conservatives) and S&D (Social democrats) groups. The former, which represented 36.6% of the MEPs in 2004, is expected to represent only 24.6% after the June elections. As for the Social Democrats, they would go from 27.3% to 18.9% of the seats in 20 years.

Leading in terms of seats in the European Parliament according to our projection, the EPP group would also come first in the largest number of countries of the European Union: 12 out of 27, including large countries such as Germany, Spain or Poland. Although it would clearly comes in second in terms of MEPs, the S&D group would only dominate in 4 countries, notably in Northern Europe. The ID group would do just as well by coming first in 4 countries, including France. If the other radical-right group (ECR) only comes first in two countries, Italy would be among them. The Renew and Left groups would only come first in one country each, and the Green/EFA group in none.

The country-by-country breakdown of our projection shows significant shifts within the European right: while in most countries, the radical right is growing at the expense of the EPP group, in some countries, such as Poland, the trend is the opposite. In Spain, the conservatives (PP) are making progress, but so are the radicals (Vox). In Italy, transfers are taking place within the radical right: the Lega is seeing a large proportion of its 2019 electorate vote for Fratelli d'Italia this year.

Also noteworthy is the significant decline of the Green parties in Germany and France (-10 and -5 seats), which partly explains the fall of the Greens/EFA group in our projection.

* Evolution compared to the present composition of the EU Parliament (March 2024) ©Ipsos– Euronews': Elections europeennes – Mars 2024

THE POTENTIAL COALITIONS IN THE NEXT EU PARLIAMENT

This coalition would have 453 seats out of 720, which represents a majority (62.9% of the seats).

Right-wing coalition

Grand coalition

This coalition would have 398 seats out of 720, which represents a majority (55,3% of the seats). Center-right coalition

This coalition would have 338 seats out of 720, which represents a minority (46,9% of the seats).

This coalition would have 233 seats out of 720, which represents a minority (32,4% of the seats).

While European institutions do not operate according to the majoritarian logic usual in parliamentary democracies, it is nonetheless interesting to see what types of alliances between groups in the European Parliament could have a majority.

Our projection shows that only coalitions including the EPP, S&D, and Renew groups would have a majority of seats. Rightwing coalitions (EPP, ID, ECR), Euro-critic coalitions (ID, ECR, NI, The Left) or even left-wing coalitions (S&D, Greens/EFA, The Left) would not be enough to pass bills.

In any case, the EPP and Renew groups will be decisive in shaping majorities in the next Parliament.

Euro-critic coalition

This coalition would have 267 seats out of 720, which represents a minority (37,1% of the seats).

THE PROJECTION INCLUDING A LEFT / RIGHT CLASSIFIC ATION OF THE PARTIES IN THE NON-INSCRITS GROUP

Beyond the margins of error associated with election polls and the fact that this projection was made 3 months before the election, many uncertainties remain.

One of the main ones concerns the 68 MEPs in the Non-Inscrits group, who could tip the balance in many close votes. They are ideologically balanced: 33 are members of leftwing parties, 28 of right-wing parties, and 7 are either centrist or from non-classifiable parties. If we add the right-leaning Non-Inscrits to the members of the EPP, ECR and ID groups, we get a very narrow majority: 362 MEP's out of 720. However, we can also see that the ideological distinction between members of the Non-Inscrits group makes the progression of the right less psignificant, as incumbent non-attached MEPs currently lean clearly to the right.

METHODOLOGY

This survey was conducted in 18 countries among representative samples of the population of voting age in each country. It was completed with documentary research for the remaining 9 countries of the European Union in order to represent the seats projection.

The countries surveyed represent 96% of the population of the European Union and 89% of the seats in the European Parliament (640 over 720). A total of 25 916 individuals were interviewed between February 23th and March 5th online and by telephone. Representativeness of the samples was ensured by the quota method.

In this instance, with regard to this study, with a confidence interval at 95%, The margins of
